Literature Review
With the changes in situational and ecological factors that affect travellers, for example (Venkatesh, 2006; Laws, 1995), several specialists have evolved. According to Gartner (cited by Pike, 2008), inspiration should be used to launch a dynamic approach. When a clear demand or need that cannot be supplied arises, this occurs. Inspirations emerge when a traveller seeks to satisfy a want or need, and this will be seen as a very crucial factor in determining their course of action and the fulfilment that follows (Chang, 2007; Correia, Oom do Valle, and Moço, 2006). According to George (2004), Spring and Woodside (2005), and other authors, one of the primary psychological effects of traveller behaviour is the inspiration for travel. Inspirations are a person's inner state, or a set of unending desires, that propels them to act or act with a purpose in mind, hence promoting human behaviour and the capabilities of the human body (Decrop, 2006; George, 2004).

Maslow’s standard is one of the most famous ones that is used to explain the source of inspiration. Maslow uses five categories of goals, which are also mentioned when a need arises: physiologic needs, security needs, social needs, ego needs, and self-actualization (Tikkanen, 2007). Travellers may need to retreat, relax, or to obtain relief from physical and emotional discomfort, as well as for regular sun want objectives. According to Crompton (cited by Saayman, 2006), seven socio-mental factors—escape from a routine environment, self-disclosure and self-correlation, allure or support in athletic endeavours, attaining a certain level of eminence, prevention of relapse, strengthening of family ties, and working with one's stage of social communication—are what motivate travellers.

Cruises, adventure, medical, wellness, sports, MICE, eco-tourism, film, rural, and religious tourism are just a few of the unique travel options it offers. Both domestic and foreign tourists are aware of India as a destination for spiritual tourism.

Purpose of the Study
This study tries to investigate how tourism has affected the nation's expansion and development. In this study, we looked at the ways that tourism is good for the nation. What steps has the government done to improve the tourism industry?

2. Materials And Methods
The statue of Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, often called the "Statue of Unity," was officially unveiled in October 2018 as a tourism destination. At 182 metres tall, it is the highest statue in the entire world. It is anticipated to increase the country's tourist industry and promote India as a travel destination. The opening hours were extended by two hours in February 2019 in addition to adding e-bike rides.

The Indian government is making significant attempts to increase investments in the tourism industry. 100% FDI is permitted through the automatic method in the hotel and tourism sector. For hotels in the 2, 3, and 4-star categories that are close to UNESCO World Heritage sites, a five-year tax holiday has been provided.

3. Results and Discussion
According to the aforementioned study, Indian tourism has a huge potential to create jobs and earn foreign currency. All departments of the Central and State governments, the commercial sector, and philanthropic organizations become active partners in the attempt to achieve sustainable growth in the nation's tourism because it is a multifaceted and service-oriented industry. The overall number of international visitors entering the nation has grown. Except for a few years over the research period, it displayed an increasing tendency. It indicates that the Indian government is focusing on both the growth of tourism and activities related to the country's tourist industry.
4. Conclusion

In conclusion, the travel and tourism industry is undeniably one of the fastest-growing and most significant sectors of the global economy. This review has shed light on the vital role of tourism in India, exploring its historical and cultural richness, natural beauty, and economic potential. The Indian tourism and hospitality sector has emerged as a major contributor to the country's service industry, generating both revenue and employment opportunities. The review highlighted the various motivations that drive travel behavior, emphasizing the importance of understanding what inspires individuals to embark on journeys. Maslow's hierarchy of needs was discussed as a framework to explain the diverse motivations that underlie travel decisions, whether driven by a desire for relaxation, adventure, self-discovery, or other personal objectives.

Furthermore, the review provided insights into major tourist destinations in different regions of India. Northern India boasts a wealth of cultural landmarks, including the iconic Taj Mahal, while the southern region offers a blend of history, stunning landscapes, and pristine beaches. Western India showcases the dynamic city of Mumbai and ancient cave systems, and the country's diverse geography provides ample opportunities for adventure tourism in the Himalayan region and coastal backwaters. In essence, India's tourism industry has the potential to contribute significantly to the nation's economy and socio-cultural development. By tapping into its rich heritage, diverse landscapes, and catering to a range of traveler motivations, India can continue to thrive as a prominent global tourism destination. With strategic planning, infrastructure development, and sustainable practices, India can harness the power of tourism for the benefit of its people and the international community. The travel and tourism industry is indeed a gateway to economic growth, cultural exchange, and mutual understanding, making it a valuable asset for any nation.
